

ANOTHER LOST YEAR...

As Americans observed our country's 232nd birthday last week, few focused on the fact that our once beautiful and bountiful nation has already gone beyond the "tipping point" when it comes to the number of people we can sustain.

It has been more than a year since Congress last debated immigration reform and triggered an overwhelming national demand to secure our borders and apprehend the millions of illegal aliens who broke the law to get into our country. Today, the immigration issue still remains unresolved – and it looms as a giant threat to our nation's future.

The Pew Research Center projects that America's population will skyrocket from today's 304 million to 438 million by 2050 – that's 134 million more people in just 42 years! More than 60% of that increase will be driven by new immigration. We must act immediately to halt illegal immigration completely and greatly reduce legal immigration to no more than 200,000 annually, a number more consistent with the long-range carrying capacity of our nation.
